² “Dangerous Drugs” is an offense category in the NCIC dataset that is used for those instances in which the police officer wants to write in detail what the drug crime is. Officers are supposed to indicate a code separate from the catch-all of dangerous drugs in order to specify which drug was at issue in the crime. “Dangerous drugs” therefore includes all of the drugs that are separately listed with different offense codes: hallucinogens (not including marijuana), heroin, opium or derivative, cocaine, synthetic narcotics, marijuana, amphetamines, and barbiturates, and also possession of narcotic equipment. See Federal Bureau of Investigations, Criminal Justice Information Services Division, “NCIC 2000 Code Manual,” December 2000, Washington, DC, http://www.leds.state.or.us/OSP/CJIS/docs/ncic_2000_code_manual.pdf (accessed March 25, 2009).
